#Kwibuka30: Ijambo rya Perezida Paul Kagame mu muhango wo gutangiza icyunamo

Today, our hearts are filled with grief and gratitude in equal measure. We remember our dead, and are also grateful for what Rwanda has become.

To the survivors among us, we are in your debt.

We asked you to do the impossible by carrying the burden of reconciliation on your shoulders. And you continue to do the impossible for our nation, every single day, and we thank you.

As the years pass, the descendants of survivors increasingly struggle with the quiet loneliness of longing for relatives they never met, or never even got the chance to be born.

Today, we are thinking of you as well. Our tears flow inward, but we carry on, as a family.

Countless Rwandans also resisted the call to genocide. Some paid the ultimate price for that courage, and we honour their memory.

Our journey has been long and tough. Rwanda was completely humbled by the magnitude of our loss, and the lessons we learned are engraved in blood.

But the tremendous progress of our country is plain to see, and it is the result of the choices we made together to resurrect our nation.

The foundation of everything is unity.

That was the first choice: to believe in the idea of a reunited Rwanda, and live accordingly.

The second choice was to reverse the arrow of accountability, which used to point outwards, beyond our borders.

Now, we are accountable to each other, above all.

Most importantly, we chose to think beyond the horizon of tragedy, and become a people with a future.

Today, we also feel a particular gratitude to all the friends and representatives here with us from around the world. We are deeply honoured by your presence alongside us on this very heavy day. The contributions you have made to Rwanda's rebirth are enormous, and have helped us to stand where we are now.

I want to recognize a few, while also asking for forgiveness for not being able to mention all who deserve it.

For example, Uganda, which carried the burden of Rwanda's internal problems for so many years, and was even blamed for that.

The leadership and the people of Ethiopia and Eritrea helped us in starting to rebuild at that time. In fact, Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed, who is here, even served as a young peacekeeper in the immediate aftermath of the genocide.

Kenya, Burundi, and the Democratic Republic of Congo hosted large numbers of Rwandan refugees, and gave them a home.

Tanzania did as well, and also played a unique role at many critical points, including hosting and facilitating the Arusha peace process. And here I must single out the late President Julius Nyerere who embodied the spirit which laid that foundation.

The Republic of Congo has been a productive partner in rebuilding, and more.

Many of the countries represented here today also sent their sons and daughters to serve as peacekeepers in Rwanda. Those soldiers did not fail Rwanda; it was the international community which failed all of us, whether from contempt or cowardice.

Among those here with us today, I salute the widow and daughter of the late Captain Mbaye Diagne of Senegal, who died a hero as he rescued many Rwandans from death.

At the United Nations Security Council in 1994, moral clarity came from Nigeria, the Czech Republic, and even as far away as New Zealand.

Their ambassadors had the courage to call the genocide by its rightful name, and resist political pressure from more powerful countries to hide the truth. Ambassador Ibrahim Gambari of Nigeria and Czech Ambassador Karel Kovanda are here with us today, and we applaud you. Even in countries where government policy was on the wrong side of history, both during the genocide and even afterwards, there were always individuals who stood out for their honesty and humanity. We shall always be grateful.

We also appreciate the tangible support we have received from partners beyond our continent over the past thirty years, in Europe, the United States, Asia, and many international organizations and philanthropies.

A notable example of solidarity came to us from South Africa, one among many. Indeed, the entire arc of our continent's hopes and agonies could be seen in those few months of 1994. As South Africa ended apartheid and elected Nelson Mandela president, in Rwanda the last genocide of the 20th century was being carried out.

The new South Africa paid for Cuban doctors to help rebuild our shattered health system, and opened up its universities to Rwandan students, paying only local fees.

Among the hundreds of students who benefitted from South Africa's generosity, some were orphaned survivors; others were the children of perpetrators; and many were neither.

Most have gone on to become leaders in our country in different fields.

Today, they live a completely new life.

What lessons have really been learned about the nature of genocide, and the value of life?

I want to share a personal story which I usually keep to myself.

My cousin, in fact a sister, Florence, worked for the United Nations Development Program in Rwanda for more than fifteen years.

After the genocide started, she was trapped in her house near the Camp Kigali army barracks, with her niece, and other children and neighbours, around a dozen people in total.

The telephone in Florence's house still worked, and I called her several times using my satellite phone.

Each time we spoke, she was more desperate. But our forces could not reach the area.

When the commander of the U.N. peacekeeping mission, General Dallaire, visited me where I was in Mulindi, I asked him to rescue Florence. He said he would try.

The last time I talked to her, I asked her if anyone had come. She said no, and started crying. Then she said, "Paul, you should stop trying to save us. We don't want to live anymore anyway." And she hung up.

At that time, I had a very strong heart. But it weakened a bit, because I understood what she was trying to tell me. On the morning of May 16th, following a month of torture, they were all killed, except for one niece, who managed to escape, thanks to a good neighbour.

It later emerged that a Rwandan working at the UNDP betrayed his Tutsi colleagues to the killers. Witnesses remember him celebrating Florence's murder the night after the attack. He continued his career with the United Nations for many years, even after evidence implicating him emerged. He is still a free man, now living in France.

I asked General Dallaire what had happened. He said that his soldiers encountered a militia roadblock near the house, and so they turned back, just like that. Meanwhile, he conveyed to me an order from the United States ambassador to protect diplomats and foreign civilians evacuating by road to Burundi from attack by the militias. These two things happened at the same time. I did not need to be instructed to do something that goes without saying. That's what I was going to do. I do not blame General Dallaire. He is a good man who did the best that could be done in the worst conditions imaginable, and who has consistently borne witness to the truth, despite the personal cost.

Nevertheless, in the contrast between the two cases, I took note of the value that is attached to different shades of life.

In 1994, all Tutsi were supposed to be completely exterminated, once and for all, because the killings that had forced me, and hundreds of thousands of others, into exile three decades before, had not been sufficiently thorough. That is why even babies were systematically murdered, so they would not grow up to become fighters. Rwandans will never understand why any country would remain intentionally vague about who was targeted in the genocide. I don't understand that. Such ambiguity is, in fact, a form of denial, which is a crime in and of itself, and Rwanda will always challenge it. When the genocidal forces fled to Zaire, now called the Democratic Republic of Congo, in July 1994, with the support of their external backers, they vowed to reorganize and return to complete the genocide. They conducted hundreds of cross-border terrorist attacks inside Rwanda over the next five years, targeting not only survivors, but also other Rwandans who had refused to go into exile, claiming thousands more lives.

The remnants of those forces are still in eastern Congo today, where they enjoy state support, in full view of the United Nations peacekeepers. Their objectives have not changed, and the only reason this group, today known as FDLR, has not been disbanded, is because their continued existence serves some unspoken interest.

As a result, hundreds of thousands of Congolese Tutsi refugees live here in our country in Rwanda, and beyond, completely forgotten, with no program of action for their safe return.

Have we really learned any lessons?

We see too many actors, even some from Africa, getting directly involved as tribal politics is given renewed prominence, and ethnic cleansing is prepared and practiced.

What has happened to us? Is this the Africa we want to live in? Is this the kind of world we want?

Rwanda's tragedy is a warning. The process of division and extremism which leads to genocide can happen any-

Throughout history, survivors of mass atrocities are always expected to be quiet, to censor themselves, or else be erased and even blamed for their own misfortune. Their testimony is living evidence of complicity, and it unsettles the fictions which comfort the enablers and the bystanders.

The more Rwanda takes full responsibility for its own safety and dignity, the more intensely the established truth about the genocide is questioned and revised.

Over time, in the media controlled by the powerful in this world, victims are rebranded as villains, and even this very moment of commemoration is derided as a mere political tactic.

It is not. It never has been.

Our reaction to such hypocrisy is pure disgust.
We commemorate because those lives mattered to us.
Rwandans cannot afford to be indifferent to the root causes of genocide. We will always pay maximum attention, even if we are alone. But what we are seeking is solidarity and partnership to recognize and confront these threats together, as a global community.

I will tell you another story.

One night, in the latter days of the genocide, I received a surprise visit past midnight from General Dallaire. He brought a written message, of which I still have a copy, from the French general commanding the force that France had just deployed in the western part of our country, Operation Turquoise.

The message said that we would pay a heavy price if our forces dared to try to capture the town of Butare, in the southern part of our country.

General Dallaire gave me some additional advice, in fact he warned me that the French had attack helicopters, and every kind of heavy weapon you can imagine, and therefore were prepared to use them against us if we did not comply.

I asked Dallaire whether French soldiers bleed the same way ours do; whether we have blood in our bodies.

Then I thanked him, and told him he should just go and get some rest and sleep, after informing the French that our response would follow.

And it did.

I immediately radioed the commander of the forces we had in that area, he is called Fred Ibingira, and told him to get ready to move. And move to fight.

We took Butare at dawn.

Within weeks, the entire country had been secured, and we began rebuilding. We did not have the kind of arms that were being used to threaten us, but I reminded some people that this is our land, this is our country. Those who bleed will bleed on it.

We had lost all fear. Each challenge or indignity just made us stronger.

After the genocide, we faced the puzzle of how to prevent it from recurring. There were three broad lessons we learned as result of our experiences.

First, only we as Rwandans and Africans can give full value to our lives.

After all, we cannot

ask others to value

African lives more highly than we ourselves do.

That is the root of our duty to preserve memory and tell our history as we lived it.

Second, never wait for rescue, or ask for permission to do what is right to protect people. That is why some people must be joking when they threaten us with all kinds of things, they don't know what they are talking about. In any case, that is why Rwanda participates proudly in peacekeeping operations today, and also extends assistance to African brothers and sisters bilaterally when asked.

Third, stand firm against the politics of ethnic populism in any form. Genocide is populism in its purified form. Because the causes are political, the remedies must be as well. For that reason, our politics is not organized on the basis of ethnicity or religion, and it never will be again.

The life of my generation has been a recurring cycle of genocidal violence in thirty year intervals, from the early 1960s, to 1994, to the signs we see in our region today in 2024.

Only a new generation of young people has the ability to renew and redeem a nation after a genocide. Our job was to provide the space and the tools for them to break the cycle.

And they have.

What gives us hope and confidence are the children we saw in the performance earlier, or the youth who created the tradition of Walk to Remember that will occur later today.

Nearly three-quarters of Rwandans today are under age 35. They either have no memory of the genocide, or were not yet born.

Our youth are the guardians of our future and the foundation of our unity, with a mindset that is totally different from the generation before.

Today, it is all Rwandans who have conquered fear. Nothing can be worse than what we have already experienced.

This is a nation of 14 million people, who are ready to confront any attempt to take us backwards.

The Rwandan story shows how much power human beings have within them. Whatever power you do have, you might as well use it to tell the truth and do what is right.

During the genocide, people were sometimes given the option of paying for a less painful death. There is another story I learned about at the time, which always sticks in my mind, about a woman at a roadblock, in her final moments.

She left us a lesson that every African should live by.

When asked by the killers how she wanted to die, she looked them in the eye, and spit in their face.

Today, because of the accident of survival, our only choice is what life we want to live.

Our people will never — and I mean never — be left for dead again.

I thank you.

#Kwibohora30: Ijambo rya Perezida Paul Kagame mu birori by Kwibohora ku nshuro ya 30

Tariki ya 4 nyakanga 2024, u Rwanda rwizihije imyaka 30 yo Kwibohora, guhagarika jenocide yakorewe abatutsi muri Mata 1994.

Ni umuhango wabereye kuri sitade amahoro, ahari ibihumbi by'abanyarwanda, abayobozi n'inshuti z'u Rwanda.

Iri ni ijambo Perezida Kagame yavugiye muri ibi birori:

forces, who have just paraded before us.

Three decades ago, this building was the site of refuge and rescue. From the surrounding neighbourhoods, Rwandans flowed here for safety.

And many were saved, thanks to the Rwandan Patriotic Army, an act that was repeated countless times, all across our country.

On July the 4th, we express our thanks to those who liberated Rwanda, and remember those who gave their lives.

Our army and security forces are a powerful symbol of unity and safety.

In opinion surveys ranking trust in public institutions,

Rwandans consistently rate our security forces among the highest.

That is no accident.

After the genocide, the first encounter that most Rwandans had with the new authorities, was with our army.

The situation in the country was still extremely tense and dangerous. Yet,

Today we come to the end of our period of commemoration, and celebrate the liberation of our country.

I want to thank all of our guests and friends who have joined us on this special day.

Rwandans today are better and stronger than we have ever been.

We keep marching forward, like the men and women of our defence and security our forces did everything in their power to treat all Rwandans with professionalism and humanity, setting the tone of everything that followed.

Even today, they remain close to the community, and invest in projects that matter to our development, such as infrastructure and medical services.

This pact of trust, which we call igihan-go, is indeed the solid foundation upon which our country was rebuilt.

It was not easy. Remaining principled and consistent is hard, very difficult. But that product of doing hard things is absolutely beautiful.

By nature, Rwanda's security posture has always been defensive, not offensive. We only act when trouble is brought on us. We prioritize cooperation and working together.

Rwanda seeks peace, for ourselves and for everyone in our region. We know the value of peace, just as well as anyone else, maybe even more.

Where there is a need for humanitarian action, Rwanda will not be absent. But the only real answer to any humanitarian crisis is to fix the root cause of the political problem. Humanitarian response cannot substitute for political solutions.

If we had not changed that formula here in Rwanda, for sure our country would still be under a United Nations peacekeeping force, divided and destitute.

Liberation cannot be imposed on people by force or fear. It is unlocked by a free choice, that each citizen makes in their heart.

Because Rwandans, with very few exceptions, have freely made this choice, our country is at peace, and will remain at peace, no matter what.

Rwanda's uniqueness only grows more notable with time.

We have shattered every negative taboo and assumption about being Rwandan.

Our politics today is based on accountability and ambition. It is a way for all Rwandans to lead a better life.

Politics is no longer a tool to exclude and harm each other.

We respect our government, but we do not fear it, because it serves all of us without distinction.

A few people outside still do not understand Rwandans.

Some of them even try to spoil what we are building, and we see it.

But all those negative efforts produce no results. They are just words on the internet, or statements somewhere from different high offices, with no power over us at all.

The values Rwandans have are now part of us. There is nobody and nothing powerful enough to take that away from us.

The endpoint of the liberation struggle was to build a state in which each of us is valued, and citizens are always at the center of government action.

Even though Rwandans have made huge strides towards this mindset, we must remain vigilant.

I am addressing this message in particular to Rwanda's young people, especially those born over the last thirty years.

This country is yours to protect, defend, and make prosperous.

It is worth repeating that real liberation only begins when the guns fall silent. We began that stage thirty years ago, and we are counting on you, the liberation generation, to take us further.

Rwanda's struggle today has a bigger scope than just surviving. It is about living well, with success.

Succeeding against poverty, dependence, and indignity.

Succeeding as an upright nation of Africans who play our part to build a better continent and a fairer world.

You have the freedom and the opportunity to live the lives you want.

But wherever your life takes you, remember your duty to uphold the good politics we have built.

Speak up, take part, and give back.

Those are the civic values that we want to define the next generation of Rwandans.

I wish you a happy Liberation Day, and may God bless us all. I thank you.

Exploring Grand-Bassam: Côte d'Ivoire's Coastal Treasure

Aerial view of Grand Bassam

Nestled along the Atlantic coast of Côte d'Ivoire, Grand-Bassam is a city steeped in history, culture, and natural beauty. Once the French colonial capital in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, this charming town today offers a unique blend of faded colonial architecture, palm-fringed beaches, and vibrant local life that draws visitors from around the world.

Grand-Bassam is perhaps best known for its status as a UNESCO World Heritage Site, recognized in 2012 for its historical significance and well-preserved colonial buildings. Walking through the old French quarter, known as Ancien Bassam, feels like stepping back in time. Grand mansions, administrative buildings, and churches from the colonial era still stand, many of them now serving as museums, galleries, or boutique hotels. The National Costume Museum (Musée National du Costume) is a standout, offering a rich display of traditional Ivorian attire and cultural heritage.

Beyond its historical allure, Grand-Bassam also captivates with its coastal charm. The long stretch of beach along the Gulf of Guinea offers stunning views and a relaxed atmosphere. Though the Atlantic's currents can be strong, the beach is perfect for sunbathing, beachside dining, and watching the colorful pirogues (traditional fishing boats) come and go.

The town's lively arts and crafts scene is another highlight. Artisans sell intricate wood carvings, paintings, and textiles at roadside stalls and markets. Grand-Bassam is also a cultural hub, frequently hosting festivals and art exhibitions that celebrate Ivorian creativity.

In essence, Grand-Bassam is more than just a seaside town—it is a living museum of Ivorian heritage, a place where past and present blend seamlessly. Whether you're a history enthusiast, an art lover, or simply in search of a tranquil coastal escape, Grand-Bassam offers an unforgettable experience in the heart of West Africa.

Kong : Ancienne Cité Islamique et Carrefour Commercial de la C.I.

Nichée dans le nord de la Côte d'Ivoire, près de la frontière avec le Burkina Faso, Kong est une ville chargée d'histoire, autrefois un centre florissant de commerce, de savoir islamique et de pouvoir politique en Afrique de l'Ouest. Avec son architecture unique et ses traditions spirituelles toujours vivantes, Kong se présente comme un véritable monument du passé précolonial de la région.

Fondée au XI^e siècle et devenue influente aux XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles, Kong s'est imposée comme un carrefour stratégique sur les routes commerciales transsahariennes. Elle servait de point de rencontre aux marchands qui échangeaient l'or, les noix de kola, le sel et les textiles entre le Sahel et les régions forestières de l'Afrique de l'Ouest. Son influence s'est renforcée avec l'émergence de l'Empire de Kong, fondé par le peuple Dioula, acteur majeur dans la diffusion de l'islam dans la région.

L'un des éléments les plus remarquables de Kong est son architecture de style soudano-sahélien, en particulier ses mosquées en terre, construites à base de briques de banco, de poutres en bois et de tours coniques. La Grande Mosquée de Kong, reconstruite au XX^e siècle sur le site de l'édifice original du XVIII^e siècle, est un chef-d'œuvre de ce style architectural et un symbole fort de l'identité islamique de la ville. En 2021, la Grande Mosquée et la mosquée voisine ont été inscrites au patrimoine mondial de l'UNESCO, renforçant ainsi la valeur historique et culturelle de Kong.

Au-delà de son patrimoine architectural, Kong reste un centre vivant de foi islamique et d'éducation. Les écoles coraniques traditionnelles y sont encore actives, et les fêtes religieuses ainsi que les rassemblements communautaires rythment toujours la vie locale. La coexistence paisible entre l'histoire et la vie quotidienne fait de Kong une destination captivante pour ceux qui souhaitent découvrir la richesse spirituelle et culturelle de l'Afrique de l'Ouest.
